

Some experts believe that it is better for children to begin learning a foreign language at primary school rather than secondary school.

Do the advantages of this outweigh the disadvantages?

Nowadays more and more people are becoming eager to learn a new language. In other words, it seems that studying a new language somehow is a must. In this regard, many experts assert that the best time to start learning is prior to secondary school. I, for one, subscribe to the view and consider that the younger you are, the faster you learn.

It is been said that an appropriate time to study a new/foreign/second novel language is during primary school since not only does the child grasp information swiftly, but also does not have to make a lot of effort to be skilled in the subject. It is crystal clear that ~~the~~ kids learn faster than adults. Moreover, the structures of the children's brain are designed to learn their mother tongue, so it is highly likely that they are able to learn the new language more quickly in comparison with ~~the~~ teenagers or adults.

Another (consideration) point which should be taken in to consideration is that when children are in the first years of their study they are neither afraid of making mistakes, nor feel ashamed of their errors. To put it simply, they are not concerned with others' opinions' and are more focused on to acquiringe the knowledge instead of engaging in the absurd issue of what ~~will~~ others will think about me. For instance, consider a seven - 7 years old kid who could not pronounce a word correctly, it is more probable that they would also laugh at their errors and at the same time learn the right pronunciation within one or two times repeating that .

The main conclusion to be drawn from this argument is that in order to become fluent in a foreign language it is most efficient if one embarks to learn before ~~the~~ secondary school. In this regard, the mind of a young child is well prepared to learn another language so quickly. Moreover, as a child has a smaller fewer ego, he is able to easily deals with his errors that might finally result in learning the subject thoroughly.
