

It is generally believed that some people are born with certain talents, for instance for sport or music and others are not. However, it is sometimes claimed that any child can be taught to become a good sport person or musicians.

Having a successful improvement in a certain sport or music involves various factors. Some people believe that having inborn talents plays the most more important role and some others argue that every person has the chance to be a good musician or a famous athlete without any special talent.

First and foremost, those people who assert that famous musicians or athletes are successful due to their innate abilities, substantiate their claims by citing cases that did not enjoy any experts but because of their talents could be a champion or a movie star, and also those people who despite many tutors and professionals' help and strenuous exercises could accomplish no goal. I personally believe that this notion can be true about those people who possess exceptional aptitudes like Albert Einstein or Mr Shajarian, a distinguished singer. If we, however, eliminate such few examples, this claim is somehow unrealistic.

On the other hand, some people argue that being interested in something, perseverance, efficient incentives, and an intellectual curriculum can offset the lack of special talents in children and help them be a brilliant star. That is why many parents try to identify their children's talents and develop them in a growing way. For instance, the Smiths adopted an ordinary child and decided to grow her up, raise her with the help of psychologists and professionals and they could develop their child's aptitude in chess such that/so that as though she became a world champion in chess.

In conclusion, it is crystal clear that an inborn talent is just one of the factors which are needed for a person to be famous and successful so the other factors not only must not be undertaken, but also they have to be reinforced and developed to diminish the effects of lack of talent in a child. I completely agree with the idea that any child can excel when he gets ample encouragement, guideline and a proper environment by means of perseverance and dedication.