

Tourism industry is a new phenomenon which governments are faced with and local people's behavior towards visitors is a new discussion that governments should answer.

Some people believe that visitors to another countries should follow local treats. They claim that local behavior is the same as rules which everyone should obey and there is no difference between local people and visitors. This group believes that customs are not changeable and no one should try to change them. Indeed, they claim that if they permit visitors to behave according to their own, their local customs may change during the years.

Nevertheless, others, myself included, believe that visitors with a different culture can bring different customs to the countries and local people can learn new treatment from visitors.

In addition, sociologists are inclined to believe that it is necessary to change local behavior during the years to have a modern society. They claim that tourists can help society to renovate their customs and behavior.

Also tourism is a new industry which can raise revenues for governments and people who live in tourists spots. So it is important that visitors enjoy staying at their destination and proposed it to others. In fact, if they are forced to follow local customs, it may cause dissatisfaction and it may be a negative advertising.

To summarize, tourism is essential for development as well as developing countries and for countries which want to be developed. So, forcing them to behave treat in the same way that the local people do, is not a good idea to attract them to visit any country.
